U.S. Note on Foreign Ministry Move A 'Trial Balloon,' Says 'Hatzofe'

"Hatzofe" (Mirshel) sees in the American note about the transfer of the Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem a move to test the reaction of the Arab world to the move. The paper believes that the Foreign Ministry should give more weight to the Arab world's reaction to the move, instead of being engaged for months in a war of attrition between the U.S. and the Arab world.

"Kol Ha'am" (Communist) analyzes the reasons for the move. The paper believes that the move is a "trial balloon" to test the reaction of the Arab world to the move. The paper believes that the move is a "trial balloon" to test the reaction of the Arab world to the move.

AT THE CINEMA

MARK Hellinger's "Crisis Cross" at the Edison, Jem, is, as the ads suggest, a thriller, complete with all the tricks of plot and direction designed to keep one trembling in one's seat to the bitter end. The tricks are probably as good as they ever were, but perhaps familiarity breeds contempt. This spectator's spine, at least, did not tingle quite properly; and the potentially interesting material is unfortunately inactivated by the crisscrossing and crisscrossing of plot, as one might expect, treated with the utmost superficiality. One's sympathy wanders from Burt Lancaster's "hero," Dan Duran, whose villain is not so sinister as he might have been, and Yvonne de Carlo fails completely to exude the glamour necessary to account for the two men's violent attraction to her.

Palmer's "Romance" at the "Light Touch" at the Jem, is, of course, again a girl from Italy, although here her great talents and refreshingly unaware style of acting seem less carefully guided than in "Crisis Cross." In addition, her role is that of a girl from Italy who falls in love with an international thief and forger of old paintings; is not very convincing. Furthermore, it is irritating that the story is told in a rather irreflexive way, occasionally as a comedy, and sometimes as a serious romance. Stewart Granger and George Sanders are the supporting stars.

Korea War Film "BELIEVE 'Fixed Bayonets'" (Orsh, Haifa) to be the first film on the Korean war to reach Haifa. This story of the platoon ordered to hold a narrow defile and cover the retreat of an American division during 24 hours of rain, runs true to the type of battle film popularized during the last World War. No female element — there is only one passing reference to a girl; no heroics, although the private sometimes expresses his thoughts too clearly; no snoring at the enemy — the Chinese are normal soldiers. Here again is the corporal who had failed to get his commission because he could not lead but who finds his nerve in the hour of need. And "Fixed Bayonets" ends with the remnants of the tired platoon carrying their equipment and wounded through the river ford to regain the main body. Indeed this film has assimilated the lessons of past productions too well. It runs in the groove without adding anything new. At the same time it maintains a satisfactory level and affords an evening's entertainment.

Antiquated Plot "THE Strange Door" (Orion) (Haifa) adapts Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Strange Door" for the screen, with Charles Laughton as the villainous Maletroit, Boris Karloff as the faithful servant of the rightful Lord and an extremely amateur performance from Sally Forrest, playing the heroine. The 19th century plot has become antiquated. The evil Maletroit, who has kept his finger in the castle dungeon for 20 years, plans to consummate his revenge by marrying the latter's daughter to a worthless scoundrel. But the villain is drowned in his own mill race, the loyal servant, dying, throws the dungeon key in the prisoners who escape as the walls which should have crushed them come together. "The Strange Door" is worth seeing for Charles Laughton alone. He has played this type of role many times and under many names. Still for the audience it is always a feast of polished acting well above that of the other members of the cast and reminiscent of a routine production.

Child Labour And Apprenticeship Laws

Two new labour laws, dealing with Apprenticeship and Child Labour, were introduced in the Knesset yesterday by the Minister of Labour.

Children under 14 will not be allowed to work except under specially stated conditions. Children under 18 may not be employed in hotels, cafes, dance halls, psychiatric institutions or in any other place designated by the Ministry of Labour as harmful to the physical or moral health of the child.

Youths of 14-18 will have to undergo physical examinations before being granted work permits. Maximum work time of youths in specified trades without such guidance.

The bill also grants the Minister of Labour the right to provide for the vocational guidance of working youths and to restrict the employment of youths in specified trades without such guidance.

A Child Labour Council is to be set up, composed of representatives of the Ministry of Labour, the Labour Federation, employers and employees and of public institutions, to be appointed by the Minister of Labour.

No youths may be employed in specified trades except on approval of the Child Labour Council, which may be granted from a vocational school or institution, and may be granted by the Child Labour Council.

The Apprenticeship Bill calls for the Ministry of Labour to set up a vocational school or institution, and may be granted by the Child Labour Council.

A committee is to be set up to determine the minimum salary and working conditions for apprentices.
